Written for the Spirit of the Age. Tas Anniversary of Burhs. WRITTEN ON THE EVENING OF THE 25TH JANUARY

Mirk is the night, and at the pane The wild winds chant a weary strain, That swells as frae a heart o'pain And dies awa, While weeping glooms, bedrenoh'd wi' rain, Shroud nature a'.

The day is gone-the dowie day-That knew not one warm sunny ray, One smile o'bloom, one merry lay Frae earth or sky; Whose hours seemed mourner in array Of saddest dye.

But come it foul, or come it fair, Wi' radiant smile or murky air, Could Sertia still flings by her care, And blythely turns, To hail the day wi' honors rare That gied her Burns,

Methinks I see the gude auld kimmer-Green be her leaves and hale her timmer-Wi' open arms in Januer's glimmer Greeting the day, Wi' welcomes that the barnes o' summer Micht lang to hao.

Methinks I hear her siller tongue, In gratefu accents heavenward flung, Blessing the hour that whae brung The dark eyed boy, Who'a' her hearts rich passions sung Wi' pride and joy. Who sung her hopes, her griefs, her fears ;

Gave voices to her smiles and tears, Sweet sounds that in all coming years Shall glad her swaips, And from their crailes to their beirs Shall sooth their pains. His lays shall serve the warrior's arm,

The throbbing heart of love shall charm, And rouse the glowing fires that warm The patriot's breast, Or gainst life's marshalled wrongs shall arm The poor, oppressed.

Was worth the loon, where'er he be, Of lowly lot, or high degree, Wha scorns to greet wi' honest glee This day's return; Nor drinks the 'cup o' memorie,' To Scotland's Burns.

May song mo'er thrill his cauldrife heart, Il cankering cares in joy depart; May faucy's sweet bewitching art, Or music's swell, Ne'er in his bronst bid raptures start, Wi' magic spell.

This night, in many a merrie core, In town and clachan, Scotland o'er, And eke on mony a stranger shore, Far, far frae hame, Warm hearts the social cup shall pour In Burns's name.

Blythe groups even now I seem to see; Warm smiles in licht beam sweet on me, And frequent swells the glush of glee Upon mine ear; While crack and joke and laughter hie Ring loud and clear.

"Tis but the dream o' loved langsine, When kind congenial hearts wad join, In bener o' the Bard Sivine, Wha charmed us a';

But loves will fade, and friends will tine; Youth melt awa. I'm sitting here my leefu' lane, Sole monarch o' as strange hearth-stane, List'ning the midnight Tempests' mane The ensements shiver,

Musing on friends estranged and gane-

Ay, gane forever. But maisless, cheerless though Isbe, Ac cup o' leve I still may free; So, 'here's thy glorious memorie,

Loved Bard o' Doon, Whose genius bright has been to me A priculess boon.'

Nor herenbouts, nor far awe, Among the countless circles sma', Who toast thy name 'midst silent awe, Or sang divine, Is there a heart that love can show Mair deep than mine.

Nervous Debility. Weakness of the system , Nervous Debility and premature decay generally arise from the Desbrustive habit of youth, that solitary practice so fatal to the healthful existence of man, and it is the young who are most apt to become its Victim from an ignerance of the dangers to which they subject themselves. Parents and Guardians are often mislead with respect to the cause or source of disease in their sons and wards.
